FINISH OF TARIFF RACE FURNISHES ENTERTAINMENT

Last Days of Contest Keep Washington Officialdom on the Qui Vive—President Handles Insurgents Shrewdly

By Ernest G. Walker.
(Mail Special to the Advertiser.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 2.—Old Tariff is coming down the home stretch this week. There are a great dust and also a tremendous commotion on the national course. The big leaders who are piloting the way are a little bedraggled. They would not want to go once again around the course.

The progressives have been trying to knock Old Tariff Revision out of the running. They are thumping and beating and shouting with grim determination. The Democrats have joined in with them, for they think it a fine game now that they have gotten a few items safe for their own constituents. And a few standpatters are sprinkled in the hostile throng, hanging on the flanks of Old Tariff. Washington always likes anything that savors of a spirited contest and therefore Washington is more or less hilarious at such a finish.

Of course the Senate is going to accept the conference report very soon. There has been no serious doubt about it, although the close vote in the House the other Saturday night, when the bill was saved from recommitment by a margin of only five has given the Republican leaders the shivers. But the Republicans are so well disciplined, that they will take care of the situation in spite of the rebellious Western Republicans and before the end of the week it is fully expected that the bill will become law.

The President has taken hold right actively to quell the Western rebellion. There is no question as to where he stands. He wants the tariff bill enacted into law, because on the whole he regards it as a good bill, not altogether as good as he would like to have but he knows that a tariff is necessarily a matter of compromise which he has given many concessions which he regards as making it a revision downward. He thinks the people will be satisfied when they understand the measure and when they see how business prosperity returns with the new tariff law upon the statute books. If a tariff bill could be framed for one section of the country alone it would not be so impossible to please everybody. The new tariff does not fit some sections of the West in all particulars which is the reason for the Western defections.

Washington is having some fun over the unique ways the President finds of bringing insurgent Republicans around into the fold. He is sending for low tariff insurgents and high tariff insurgents and is talking to them like a father. All these, of course, are from the West. Far Eastern Republicans are opposing the bill.

Sunday morning he had dear old Senator Scott, of West Virginia, in for breakfast at the White House. And after breakfast was over and the Senator had been taken out on the back porch for a fine sniff of fresh air the President proposed that they should go to church together. Of course "Scotty" accepted. No one could decline the President's invitation to church and away they rode in the President's swift going automobile and they sat in the same pew and during the services someone in that pew nodded and it was. Any way the virile old West Virginian is going to vote for the tariff bill and the President is satisfied with having brought him under the preaching of a good Unitarian minister.

But there have been a lot of humorous things in connection with the last days of the tariff bill. Everybody said everything was all right in the House. The Republicans there would stand right up behind the President and they would push through the conference report, which he had taken a hand in framing. But proper account was not taken of a lot of bad Western Republicans, who jumped off the reservation and made "Uncle Joe" Cannon and his lieutenants exceedingly uneasy for quite a long while Saturday afternoon and evening. A motion to recommit the bill was expected. It is always made to give the opposition a chance to test their strength. And when it was made on the tariff bill the Republicans had only five votes to spare. If the Democrats who were absent and unpaired had been in their seats they could have defeated tariff legislation temporarily. So the joke is upon Representative Gillett, of Springfield, Mass. He is a slender nervous man, very much interested in the bill because Massachusetts fares so well under its provisions. He has not been very well but he arose from a sick bed a few days ago to go to the Senate office building and help strengthen a few backbones on a Massachusetts item.

Mr. Gillett became very weary at the prolonged House proceedings and thought he would go away to the committee room for a while and read a novel in which he had become much interested. The bells ring when a vote is taken. The bells did ring when the roll was called on the motion to recommit but Mr. Gillett was right in the thick of the plot and he did not hear. His colleagues are having a world of fun with him and it will be many a month before he hears the last of it. No harm was done in reality, because a majority of five is as good as a majority of fifty.

It is many years since a party undertook to revise a tariff that it and not the opposing party had framed. Therefore it is that the Republicans have been meeting with some trouble. All in all it is surprising that they have done as well as they have. They had to tear down parts of a building they had constructed themselves. If the Democrats had constructed the building, there would have been a better argument at hand for defending the action. But every Republican liked the Dingley law in some particular and when his favorite feature of it was eliminated or modified there was an outcry.

When the Wilson law was enacted it, as a Democratic measure, took the place of the McKinley law, a Republican measure. When the Dingley law, a Republican measure, was enacted it took the place of a Democratic measure. Then the new tariff law has been enacted in midsummer, when there is little else of interest to the readers of newspapers. Therefore the public attention has been much centered upon the tariff. The thousand and one people, who are ever ready to voice their complaints, have come to the front. They did that less when the Dingley law was framed but because the country was in the midst of industrial depression and the demand for a tariff to bring about a revival of business was very general. They cried out against the McKinley law, which experts say was a very excellent tariff measure, and because there was no time to make a thorough explanation of its provisions before an election came on, the Republicans were defeated and the law had to be repealed.
